Considerations for Visiting Natural and Cultural Heritage Sites

Things to consider when visiting natural and sensitive areas are as follows:

- Checking and observing the visiting hours
- Being sensitive in areas where photography is not permitted
- Being sensitive to the environment
- Avoiding littering and waste disposal items
- Avoiding activities that harm animals and plants in their natural habitats
- Being careful when visiting forest areas, and not lighting camp fires or similar
- There is a Bird Sanctuary in the Gediz Delta under the Ramsar Convention. This protected area should avoid any actions that could harm birds and should not harm the environment.
- Avoiding areas where endangered species are strictly protected and areas that are dangerous for general safety reasons.
- Avoiding damaging rare, endemic, endangered, or threatened natural plant species within protected areas in any way. These species may not be collected, uprooted, or cut into pieces. Wildlife eggs may not be collected, and their nests may not be disturbed.
